Superintendent's Highlights

This has been the first year of having a curriculum director. Although only half-time, the director has brought the district miles along the path to coherent and cohesive curriculum, focusing on reading.

Our technology network and planning has been similarly improved with the addition of a curriculum coordinator, replacing a contracted company. More time has been available and more expertise has enhanced our system significantly. We have almost no down time and the network has grown significantly.

Using a citizens' committee to help with developing options and then promoting the best solution, the district passed a bond levy with 83% to build a new 8-classroom complex devoted to science and technology. Physical and life science labs, two computer labs, a technician lab, restrooms and additional classrooms will be available by next January. Construction began in April.

The district developed and had approved its Certificated Personnel Support plan with work from a number of staff members. The plan will further help category 1-3 teachers, but will also provide better correlation and training with veteran educators involved in mentoring and assisting.

The district initiated a Management & Operations Review through the ISSA to help develop the foundation for comprehensive planning. A 7-member team of educators from outside the district is conducting over 80 interviews of staff, board members and patrons from which to develop a report for the Board in July, 2001.
